

Lexical Priming A New Theory

Lexical Priming proposes a radical new theory of the lexicon, which amounts to a completely new theory of language based on how words are used in the real world. Here they are not confined to the definitions given to them in dictionaries but instead interact with other words in common patterns of use.

Lexical Priming: A new theory of words and language sets out to outline a new theory of language based on co-occurrence patterns that are stored in the individual's mind, before contact with others leads to the development of shared language expectations. These expectations, or primings, are shown to be the factors underlying acquisition and use of language, as well as in creativity and language change. Some of the findings are not entirely new, although are expressed differently here as ...

the theory of lexical priming suggests that each time a word or phrase is heard or read, it occurs along with other words (its collocates). This leads you to expect it to appear in a similar context or with the same grammar in the future, and this 'priming' influences the way you use the word or phrase in your own speech and writing.
